Gilsum, NH Always an Experience!

After numerous trips to New England over a decade, especially the mining country of southwestern New Hampshire, these words probably represent the culmination of our annual June trip.

Many of you have read about the village of Gilsum in previous issues of ROCK BUSTER NEWS. Then, as you know, Gilsum village in west central New Hampshire and its annual Rock, Gem and Mineral Swap is a priority destination for Linda and myself in early summer. Each annual visit is a new and varied experience from any previous. In addition, each pilgrimage to New Hampshire's historic pegmatite Mecca includes searches for new collecting sites to explore amongst over 60 local mines and their dumps.

Gilsum 2008 started out uncustomarily cloudy and cool. Saturday saw the usual early mineral enthusiasts as slow to start and curious crowds arrived late. By mid-afternoon, it appeared experienced visitors, novices and families were full into the show. Volume of traffic gave every indication of being the norm for the event. By five o'clock, threatening clouds formed. Much before dealers or visitors could make preparations to take shelter before the famed ham and bean supper, troubled skies began a steady downpour on Gilsum School field. At day's end, what originally had appeared to be brisk sales, added up to only half of our expectations.

Day two, Sunday, visitors were family oriented and sales were sluggish which is not abnormal for Day Two of most shows. What was most apparent was that current economic tribulations of our nation affected our table sales. We also experience a second day of late afternoon storms.

Around two o'clock we noted storm clouds forming and a change of wind direction. Many dealers began to pack up. By four o'clock we were loaded up and on our way back down to Brattleboro. We had a smattering of raindrops but a downpour never occurred. Later post show communication from Rob indicated "lightening strikes a mile to the north with high winds, nickel-size hail stones and half a dozen emergency calls."

How did the show organizers make out? Some weeks later, via e-mail communication with Show Chair Rob Mitchell, it was learned that show still "Did very well . . . overall." He also noted that "Some folks (dealers) said that "They did quite well." Philosophy here . . . maybe we just didn't have what visitors wanted . . . this year. We sold enough for our show expenses and some pocket money. After all, our show time at Gilsum is a getaway from everyday life. Gilsum and every show in which we participate earns residuals from a very interesting hobby.

What really made our Gilsum experience was seeing old friends, acquaintances and meeting new people. This year, in spite of the weather, proved to be exceptionally exciting. Enthusiasm for Mindat.org produced more than half a dozen new memorable faces and personalities.

Several days before departure for hinterlands of the Granite State, a Mindater made inquiry as to whether there was a show at Gilsum this year. His question drew over half-a-dozen enthusiastic responses that of course included my own. What made this year's Gilsum experience amazing is that we were able to meet all but one of those contacts.

By displaying a "Did you Mindat today?" sign at our dealer space, we now have faces and personalities to associate with what were once just message board names. We met Steve Cantiello (New York); Paul Young, Kevin Downey and Wayne Corwin (Massachusetts), Steve Garza (Indiana), Rachel Cesana and daughter (Rhode Island) Also reunited with a Connecticut collector, Jeremy Zolan, whom we met at Gilsum 2007.

While Gilsum 2008 wasn't a great financial success, memories and new northeast friends made Gilsum of 2008 all the more exciting. We also had an opportunity to fit in exploration of two local mines just a day before and day after the show.

We're now looking forward to Gilsum 2009 and their 45th annual show.
